

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

irreparable. Unless the generation of young men and women emerging from the mighty conflict is well equipped for the arduous labors which it must undertake, the world will experience a reversal which a century will not be able to repair. This is the time above all others for the public-spirited people of America to give especial thought and devote especial energy to the maintenance and growth of schools and churches."

—Albert B. Cummins.

"In the total of sixty million people of productive age in the United States, students in higher education constitute only about one-half of one per cent. Their going to college will not lower the productive capacity of the country as a whole in any appreciable degree."—Commissioner Claxton.

"The nation will be needing educated men even more than ever before as a result of this war for the coming years, and the colleges must supply them."—Secretary Baker.

Forty-five thousand college men in America are now officers and leaders in the national army. Practically all qualified aviators are from the colleges. This is what the War Department thinks of college training.

"I know Dartmouth is a small college, but there are those who love her."—Daniel Webster.

THE VALUE OF COLLEGE EDUCATION

"To educate the reason without educating the desire is like placing the repeating rifle in the hands of the savage."—Herbert Spencer.

"Whatever you would put into the state, you must first put into the schools."—Humboldt.

"American achievements in the world of nations tomorrow will be the expression and embodiment of ideas set free in American colleges today."—Dr. J. A. MacDonald.

"Our learning should be neither a couch on which to rest, nor a cloister in which to promenade alone; nor as a tower from which to look down on others; nor as a fortress when we may resist them; nor as a workshop for gain and merchandise, but as a rich armory and treasury for the glory of the creator and the ennoblement of life."—Lord Bacon.

"It is clear that the benefit of a college education consists not in the abundance of opportunities that have been neglected. It consists in the firmness of moral and intellectual fibre which have been developed in the college."—President Lowell.

"Every scholar is something added to the riches of the commonwealth."—John Knox.

"Education is a practical adjustment to the spiritual possessions of the race, including the scientific, the literary, the aesthetic, the institutional, and the religious inheritance."—Nicholas Murray Butler.